The ATP new mobile application

Presentation
of an ambitious project

ATP is the Panama Tourism Authority and is a government institution responsible for promoting, encouraging, and protecting tourism in the country. They have successfully managed everything related to the tourist aspect of the country for more than 58 years, creating different tourism campaigns and working tirelessly to show all the great things Panama has to offer to people around the world. They came to Rootstack for help creating a new and exciting platform that could make tourism accessible to anyone and anywhere, and we help them create this amazing application.

Testimonials
What our clients say

"Our relationship with the company Rootstack exists since November 2012. It arises from the need to renew the website and migrate all the information from the old platform to the new platform in Drupal. The result of this project has been satisfactory since it is a modern website that meets the requirements of the Government Innovation Authority (AIG), it is also innovative because it is the first government site with responsive design. We are very satisfied with what was delivered and we recommend them for similar projects. "

Our best api
services with atp

APIs allow their products and services to communicate with others, without needing to know how they are implemented. This simplifies the development of applications and saves money and time. In turn, an API offers flexibility, simplifies design, administration and, most importantly, provides opportunities for innovation. Rootstack developed a completely new API that adapts to the requirements of the project and completely adapted the structure of the real site that would be used in the mobile application.
