Barcoding Software Category

A barcode only becomes meaningful if you have the adequate tools to interpret the information contained in the lines. Barcode technology offers multiple benefits to both businesses and consumers. To get the most out of this solution, one needs to use special barcoding software. It's a program that helps you assign and manage barcodes for your products. Most of the barcoding software in the market offer integration with inventory handling, as well as point of sales systems, which is extremely helpful to track and assist in the correct management of the stock level's information.

“We were shipping out hundreds of thousands of 4 x 6 shipping labels each year to dozens of manufacturing partners. Eventually we reached a point at which we had over 35 different label formats to maintain. The labels were programmed in raw ZPL code for our thermal bar code printers. Any time we needed to modify a label, or add a new one, our programmers would have to make edits to the long strings of code. This required lots of complicated coding, as well as testing each label – pixel by pixel.”
