SUMMER 2026
Customer Success Report

Low-Code Development Platforms Category

Low-code development platforms enable companies to create software quickly without the need for deep coding expertise. The solutions offer base-level code, integrations, and scripts to empower businesses to prototype, build, and scale applications without needing to develop complex infrastructures. Even non-developers can use these programs to build applications rapidly with customized functionality and workflows.

In short, low-code development platforms integrate with APIs, web services, and databases to link data, enable developers to customize source code and HTML markup, and produce source code as a foundation for customization.

“Before ELMA, we used to receive all the purchase requests in Excel tables format. After that, a free supplier picked the request. Sometimes the requests were ignored and got lost. The supplier recorded the data: he entered it in another table, manually assigned the request number, specified the initiator, and sent a letter to the budget holder for coordination. When approving the invoice, it might turn out that there were no funds in the budget. Now we approve the potential applications at the first stages to avoid such financial risks.
